Translated from Paris papers to the 19th October, received at Philadelphia, by the Lydia, capt. Webb, 40 days from Bor-

PARIS, October 16.

The following is the historial Exposition just published by the Elector of Bavaria, and which forms his Manifesto against Austria. Never did oppression display itsalf under a more odious character, and yet such a conduct does not excite the indignation of every Elector! What is the Elector of Saxonv about? What is the Elector of Hesse-Cassel about? Are they waiting for Austria to send them an usher of the aulic court, or are they stopping for her to invade their States, and express her surprise that they complain? The Electots of Bavaria, of Wurtemburg and of Baden have made common cause with France: their Houses will receive the tyranny of the House of Austria; a tyranny at every instant, and which extends over all the members of a body which the Emperor of Germany ought to protect.

HISTORIAL EXPOSITION. Of the motives which have determined the conduct of H. H. the Elector Palatine

Bavaria, exhausted by an unfortunate war, was recovering in the midst of peace. Without betraying the least uneasiness, she beheld camps forming in the Austrian Princes bordering on her frontiers. Peace appeared to her an object so desireable that she never imagined the Continental powers would seek to disturb the repose they enjoyed.

Thus then when clouds were perceived to rise from afar between France and Russia, hopes were entertained that the distance of these two empires from each other would prevent a rupture, or that at least Germany would avoid taking a part in it. Bavaria too, was so foreign to the differences which divide these two States, that it was difficult to conceive any power would wish her to take arms in this quarrel against France.

Bayaria had no complaint to bring for ward against the Emperor Napoleon. By his powerful influence, she had obtained indemnities for losses she had experienced last war; and the courts of Vienna and Petersburgh can not be ignorant, on the contrary, of the interest he took in the affairs of Bavaria, in that conjeur ure.

In this state of things, intelligence was received at Munich that the negociations between France, and Russia, scarcely begun, had broken off, and that at the same time, Austria was assembling numerous armies near Wells, and dispatching troops to the Tyrol.

Several detachments on their way thither crossed the Bavarian territory without any previous notice. On complaints being made of this conduct, the Austrian envey at Munich gave the most satisfactory explanations, promising that the officers who headed these detachments should be punished. These promises were not fulfilled; and advices were received that the Austrian troops crossed the Bavarian territory more frequently and in greater numbers. This news gave birth to conjectures that the troops of the camps of Wells intended crossing the Inn.

The elector nevertheless still hoped to preserve a neutrality, which the exhaust ed state of his territories and their geographical position appeared to prescribe

H. E. H. had already ordered his mi nister to make overtures to the court o Vienna on this head, when Prince Schwar-zenburgh arrived at Munich. He brought a letter from the emperor of Austria, by which his majesty required the elector in the most precise terms, to join the Imperial troops with his own-This letter contained threats in case of refusal, but an assurance that if acceded to, no pretensions should be brought forward against Bayaria, It was in this manner that the first overtures were made. The elector had still less reason to think of its being in agiration to bring forward pretensions, as the Bayarian minister had, under the reserve of his electoral highness's approba. tion, just concluded a treaty, which granted several considerable advantages to his majesty the emperor and to the elector of Salzburgh.

The intentions of the court of Vienna were still better known from the haughty tone assumed by the prince Schwarzenberg, in an audience granted him by the elector, and in a second which he had with the minister of foreign affairs.

He required that the Bavarian army should be delivered up to the Austrian generals, in order to be incorporated with that of Austria. The threat escaped him that in case of refusal it should be disarmed. He likewise demanded as exact statement of the army, and that the elector should reply to these propositions in one

Nothing was ready; the elector conceived that he might still rely on the con. fidence he had in the court of Vienna, and accordingly he sent lieutenant gen. count Nogarolla to his majesty the emperor, and in a letter written with his own hand, represented to him in a manner equally strong and candid, the position in which he was placed, and the necessity he lay under of preserving a system of neutrality.

The elector did not take a single step but what indicated that his sentiments had always been the same, yet general Nogarolla was scarcely set off for his destination, before advices were received at Munich of the preparations making by the Austrian army to cross the Inn.

H. E. H. could not but perceive that the Austrian generals had formed the design, by an appearance of negociation, preventing his taking defensive measures; in or. der that they might be enabled to get his troops and perhaps his person into their power.

Nevertheless General Mack confessed on this head to a Bavarian officer who had been sent to him, that in consequence of the assurance given to prince Schwarzenberg he had delayed the forced march of General Klenau's division, who were to repair to Neuburgh, in order to cut off the retreat of the Electorial regiment.

The moment was now arrived when H. E. H. no longer confidently relying on the assurances of which until then the Austrian Minister had been so lavish towards him, was induced to take, for the maintenance of his independence a prompt and courage.

The Court of Munich, by seeking to give time, had no hostile view, but merely that of preserving her neutrality, and of guaranteeing herself by measures! which circumstances rendered necessary, from what Prince Schwarzenberg had threaten. ed. Attempts were then made to negociate with him; but what was the astonishment of the Elector and his Minister on finding that this general, who had with so much haughtiness insisted on an immediate reply, had no power whatever to treat, and that in order to bring any matter to a conclusion, it would be necessary to apply to Field Marshal Lieutenant Mack. It was at the very moment that this gere al and prince Schwarzenberg were making proposals for a coalition that, on the ninth of September the Austrian troops penetrated into Bavaria.

From the first day these troops set foot in the Bavarian dominions, they laid on heavy requistion, insisted on being fed by the country, and began to emit paper money, by obliging it to be received at its nominal value whilst in its own provinces it loses 80 per cent.

Such were the circumstances under which it was proposed to disband & incorporate the Bavarian army.

The orders for the retreat of the troops were only given in the night, on the 8th of September, and after the strongest importunities, the Elector and his minister quitted the capital, in order to retire into the province of Franconia.

Notwithstanding the violent conduct which had been adopted towards the Elec. tor, his confidence in the person of his ma, jesty and in the field murshal was not yet diminished. He in consequence sent lieu. tenant col. Rebeaupierre to the conference assigned at Haag.

This officer had orders to represent that the junction of the Electorial with the Austrian troops could only be the result of a reaty & not a reliminary condition, he was also to declare that his mijesty would no. ver consent to their incorporation, and that they had received orders to hie on the first attempt to disarm them.

Prince Schwarzenberg proposed that the troops should be ordered to hault whilst a courier was sent to Vienna to bring back instructions. Lieutenant Colonel Ribau. pierre, would have adopted this proposal, but general Mack insisted on the Bavarian columns stopping, whilst his own army should continue their march. Upon this the Bavarian officers withdrew and the ne-gociation was broken off. The Austrian army approaching the Isor the Bavarian troops dispersed in divers garrisons, retreated so as to avoid falling in with them. They marched towards the Danube and took up their cantonments in the Upper Palatine.

of the coast, be represented in their true point of view to the government of Vienna, the baron Gravenruth, eavoy extraordinary from his H. E. H: to his majesty and who was then at Munich, received orders to repair without delay to Vienna, his majesty wishing by this choice, to express in the strongest manner his desire to preserve the ties of friendship still subsist.

This minister on the 13th of September, sent his brother charge de affairs to the court of Vienta and captain of his high. nesses' staff to general Mack, who was then at Munich; he was the bearer of a letter by which invoking the most perfect neutrality it was offered to determine on a line which the Austrain troops should follow in their march, as also the positions they should occupy: by means of which they should not be in any manner disturbed and every sort of collision would be avoid-

General Mack in his reply by letter, men. tioned only what he had already verbally stated to captain Gravenruth, namely; that the emperor would never consent for Bavaria to remain neuter, nor even that as an ally, her troops should remain in a bo-

In this conference he entered into a statement of all that had taken place from the mission of baron Novoziltzoff to the establishment of the head quarters at Munich, grounding the sudden invasion of Bavaria, on the necessity of concealing from France the preparation for attack, which were then

He rejected every project for drawing a line of demarkation, spoke of the approaching arrival of the Russians, who would not stop until the Bavarian troops were incorporated with the Austrian army, and who would not leave them in safety even in Franconia. He added that the Bavarians ought not to rely on the protection of Prus sia, that nothing should divert him from pursuing them every where; that Russia had an army on the frontiers of Prussia in order to watch for that power, and that on the first signal twenty five thousand Cossacks should ravage her provinces.

General Mack and count Burl, the Aussian minister in Bavaria made us of very unguarded expressions relative to the Elector of Bavaria and his ministry. The general finished by saying: " I have it in my power to treat Bavaria as an enemy's country; but I still entertain hopes that every thing will pass over amicably."

Whilst baron Gravenruth was giving an account of these proceedings to his E. H. in order to receive new orders, reports from the civil authorities on the conduct of the Austrain army, were daily received.

Victuals and forage were every [where required without payment; receipts alone were delivered, which added other millions to the unpaid debt of last war.

The harness carried away by force from the peasantry, and the horses taken in the streets were immediately employed for the service of the army. Heavy requisitions were levied. The laborers were deprived of their plough-boys.

The Bavarian soldiers absent on furlough were forbidden to rejoin their regiments, under the penalty of having their goods confiscated.

The country was inundated with Vienna bank notes: An ordinance forced them to be received at their nominal value; tradesmen and artificers could not refuse them without exposing themselves to have their property confiscated.

The commandants and commissaries of the army and the minister of Austria at Munich, took measures which belong only to an administration legally instructed.

Lastly, the commissary general of the army did not think he to confine himself to giving orders in the country of which the Austrians were masters; he addressed them also on the 16th and 17th September, to the president of the administration at Amberg.

Orders were given to send every eight days to the army chest, the revenues of different kinds collected in the country, without having previously paid the salaries. The bank notes were also ordered to be received at their nominal value.

Another severe ordinance ordered the Austrian deserters to be delivered up. The president of the administration of Amberg sent back these orders announcing that he could only obey those of his electoral high-

The minister Gravenruth, nevertheless, conceived it his duty to complain; in consequence of which he sent an officer of staff to the Imperial army.

The archduke Ferdinand, who had in the mean time assumed the command, re-In order that the relations which had plied, that the commissary had gone beexisted with the generals of the Austrian I youd his instructions, and appeared even! Store of Robert Gray.

army might notwithstanding the removal | to entertain doubts whether the complains was well founded; he reserved to himself to give a reply in four or five days.

As the Austrian troops directed their march to the Upper Palatinate, on the side of Bohemia and Neuburg, the Bava. rian army was under the necessity of retir. ing into the provinces of Franconia.

On the 28th September, the reply of the Archduke Ferdinand was received at Bamberg, he contented himself with referring to the Count Bual, the Austrian mi. nister then at Wurtzburg.

After all that had passed, this minister met with no difficulties in repairing to the which was granted him, he presented to H. E. H. a letter from H. M. by which in consequence of the first propositions, the junction of his troops was insisted

The Count Bual afterwards declared that he had full powers to conclude a Treaty of Alliance with Bavaria. He made proposals to which it was difficult to attach any belief. Austria having constant. ly shown herself adverse to it by a sys. tem acted upon for opwards of a centu.

Several objections were started to him in renewing to him the demand of acknow. ledging the neutrality of the Elector; but he declared in the most positive mas. ner, that the Emperor of Austria wouldne. ver consent to an armed neutrality. Per. haps he would agree to determining a ter! tain extent of the territory for the town of Munich, which the Austrian troops will not trespass on, if H. H. will on his side disband his army.

This idea was of a nature to revolt the Elector and his ministry; still, in order to avoid every reproach of having broken off a negociation which might in the sequel, insured the neutrality of Bavaria, that neutrality was coldly rejected. The Count Buol added that if the Elector would disband his army, the Emperor would consent to his preserving the Franconian

The Minister for foreign affairs repelling this proposal, the Austrian minister said that the Emperor would, also permit the Elector to retain the Swabian regiments but that on these conditions alone he would grant the neutrality.

How happens it that the Austrian Ministry establishes such a difference, more especially so offensive, between the provinces of H. E. H.? His Electoral Highness and the Bavarian nation are equally convinced of the courage which animates the whole army; its fidelity is well

The Elector could not give a better proof of his sentiments in this respect than in confiding to the Bavarian and Swabian troops the defence of his country, and to the Franconians the guard of his person and family.

The Count Buol declared moreover, that H. E. H. did not consent to disarm, H. M. would not on that account treat him as an enemy butthat conceivings just mistrust, he would be forced to act with regard to him as circumstances might prescribe.

It was observed to him how very indeterminate were these sentiments, and in how many ways they might be interpreted. He merely replyed that the ministry of H. H. made him no counter proposal, whilst he stated himself to be empowered to accept any, the object of which was the disbanding of the Bayarian troops. H. B. independence of the Sovereign could not permit that such conditions should ever form the basis of any treaty.

The Count Buol may now with reason observe that he could not make himself be heard, that the Bavarian Ministry would not listen to him and that he completely miscorried in his negociation. On the approach of the French troops he began form complaints: he gave to understan that he was no onger where he ought to and that if overtures were not made him he would retire to the head-quarters of the Austrian army. Intelligence was in fa received at Court, that on the 27th Sep tember, at three in the afternoon, he ha quited Wurtzburg.

Thus were terminated negociation which Austria proposed to herself to su c ed in, after having overrun with he umerous armies the provinces of a peace able and friendly neighbour.

to consideration the case of the brig George detained in the hatbour of Norfolk, with twelve hundred Demijohns of brandy on board, and to report by bill or otherwise-

Mr. Newton stated that the brig George sailed from Nortolk for Teneriffe, and received in return for her cargo brandy in demijohns-after they were on board the English had issued orders to capture neutrals trading with or having Spanish produce on board -that the master having protested against such orders, applied to the consul, who advised him to endeavour to return to Norfolk, and get further directions from his owners. It is continued Mr.

A sword, with energy, continued he, is the reward of valor only, which is but a small part of the virtues of Mr. Eaton-Mr. Quincy wished a subject of this importance, when we are endeavoring to do honor to the actions of a great man, had been referred to a select committee, which might have done his merits more credit than the hasty resolution before us.

'Tis not seeking out the ex-bashaw-'tis not leading his little band through the burning desarts of Asia-no-nor the victory before Derne, that we reward. It is the idea of a private citizen, called forward by no official duty; but stimulated by that Godlike attribute, philanthropy; coming a volunteer to execute a plan, formed alone in such a noble mind, at which veteran chiefs with reason might tremble-to surmount apparently unconquerable difficulties, across parching desarts, fearless of plague or famine, to pull a cruel usurper from his throne, and thus release his fellow citizens from cruel bondage. These are the attributes of Mr. Eaton; these are the workings of a great mind. Such is the man we are endeavoring to shew our gratitude to-let us then offer something worthy of such a noble character's accepting to invest money in fuch property, viz. feat on the banks of the Rappahannock River, directly opposite the town of Fredericksburg, con. taining about eleven hundred acres, four hundred of which are in wood, and valuable timber, the rest in cultivation, and pleasure grounds- The land in tillage is level, a confiderable part of it has been highly manured, and the whole of it well adapted to the culture of grafs, finall grain, and Indian corn, as the crop now growing will attest. The house and offices are of brick, and on a large and handfome fcale, with a garden in front containing four acres, laid off with take and well planted with the chaiceft fruit trees, new in full bearing, and ornamented with forest trees and fhrabs of almost every description.-There is on the eftate adjoining the river, a griftmill built of free frone, containing the modern machinery and two pair of flores, one of them Fronce Burrs-It commands a large country cul. tem, is well fituated for merchant bulines, and has rented for five hundred dellars per annum ex. clasive of all the grain of the farm hopper free, which is equal to three hundred dellars more,-There are all necessary out houses, for either convenience or luxury, fuch as ice-house, springhouse, barn, ftable, offices, &v. &c. With all thefe advant ges and expensive improvements, this property is offered at a price which the lands alene ought to command. There are allo fome valuable afheries, and quarries of free flone on Alle, a tract of land generally called Clark's. about two miles below Charham, on the north bank of the Rappahannock river, and within view of the town of Frederick burgh, containing upwards of four handred acres. Abour one hun. red and twenty acres of this tract is Rappahan nock river bottom in cultivation, and is well adapted to Indian corn, fmall grain, &c. the ref. due is in wood, farrounding a height, which furnifies a beautiful feite for building.

Alfo, a tract of land in Stafford county, adjoining Stafford coast house, containing apwards of twelve hundred acres. This is good farming land, and has feveral tenants on it.

Alfa, a tract of land in Westmoreland and Richmond eauntics, containing upwards of two thousand aeres, en which there are also several tenants. These two last mentioned tracts of land will be fold in fmall tenements, or in entire trade, as may best fair the wishes of purchasers.

Alfo, a track of land called Boyd's Hole, con. taining about one hundred and fifty acres, on the banks of the Potomae, in King George county, on which there are a comfortable dwelling house, flore and tobacco inspection ware house. Few fituations combine more advantages, it being an excellent fland for a ftore, ferry and tavern, the two first of which are at present kept there. The houses have lately been put in good repair, and the buildings alone will rent for three hundred dollars a year. The land is good in quality, and the fituation abounds in fift, oyfers and will
